BRISTOL TOWNSHIP MAN, ACCUSED OF BEING DRIVER OF DEATH CAR, HELD IN ILLINOIS FOR BUCKS CO. OFFICIALS

Gene Waters, 24, To Be Charged With Voluntary Manslaughter and Failure to Stop at Scene of Accident—Accused of Driving Car Which Caused Death of W. Robert Stinger, and Injury of Charles Mitchell

A man accused of being the driver of the car which on Christmas eve killed one youth and seriously injured another is being held in Illinois for the Bucks County authorities.

This information was made public shortly before noon today when Anthony Russo, Chief Bucks County detective, stated that he and a Pennsylvania Motor Police officer from South Langhorne barracks, would leave for Illinois.

The man being held, according to Russo, is Gene Waters, 24, Bristol Township. Waters, according to Russo, will be charged with voluntary manslaughter and failure to stop at the scene of an accident. It is said that Waters has waived extradition.

Chicago authorities last night wired the authorities of Bucks County that Waters had been apprehended and was being held awaiting further instructions from them. It was stated this morning by Bucks County authorities that Waters is being detained in the Knox County Jail at Galesburg, Ill.

Waters is wanted, state authorities, in connection with the death on Christmas eve of W. Robert Stinger, 17, of Cornwells Heights. The injured youth is Charles Mitchell, 16, of Bridgewater.

Waters was taken into custody by Illinois authorities upon information furnished by Russo and Penna. Motor Police.

The accident in which Stinger met his death and Mitchell was seriously injured, is believed to have occurred at about seven o'clock on Christmas eve.

Whether the boys were walking together or near each other is a matter of conjecture, the Mitchell lad stating he does not recall anyone by the name of Stinger. Penna. Motor Police, in attempting to reconstruct incidents surrounding the accident, are of the opinion that the two boys were walking west on Bristol Pike, near the eastern approach to the Nesheim Creek bridge, Croydon.

The body of Stinger was found partly under the guardrail on the upper side of the thoroughfare; and a short time later the injured Mitchell youth was found beyond the guardrail and down the embankment on the same side of the highway. Both were taken to Harriman Hospital, but Stinger was pronounced dead upon arrival. Mitchell did not regain consciousness for two days, and it was then he informed hospital authorities and members of his family that he did not know Stinger, and could not recall what had happened.

The Mitchell lad had stopped at Croydon post office at approximately 6.30 p. m., on Christmas eve, after leaving his employment with Penn Valley Constructors, Inc. He was seen as he started walking down Bristol Pike toward his home in Bridgewater. At about 7.20 Charles' sister, Florence Mitchell, 14, and his brother, James, 12, left their home, taking six smaller children of the family to Croydon for an expected visit of Santa Claus. As they walked along Bristol Pike, Florence and James picked up a glove and a shoe belonging to Charles. They continued to Croydon, and en route home halted at a gasoline station to ask if there had been an accident, telling of finding the glove and shoe belonging to their brother. Just after they were informed that no accident had been reported there, Frank McClintock, 12, of Bridgewater, arrived, seeking aid, saying that someone had been hurt. It was then that the Mitchell children hurried home to get their mother.

Reaching the scene Mrs. Mitchell requested that she see the injured boy in the army ambulance which had been halted on the highway, the driver giving aid. She was asked to await

Doylestown Residents Are Urged To Be Vaccinated

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 6.—With at least two and possibly three contacts having been made by people of this area with smallpox cases in Ambler, North Wales and Horsham, local physicians and the Doylestown board of health have suggested that every resident of the community be vaccinated immediately, or as soon as possible.

This suggestion came after a resident of Doylestown had visited a patient in Ambler when the patient in question was listed as a pneumonia case, and later as smallpox. The board of health was also informed that one or more local people were in indirect contact with a Horsham smallpox case.

"We do not want the people of Doylestown to become panicky over this condition of affairs, but we are suggesting that all individuals be vaccinated," declared Dr. John J. Sweeney, president of the Doylestown board of health.

Company Here Officially Notified of Gov't Award

The management of the Bristol plant of the Rohm & Haas Company has been officially notified that the Company is to receive the Army-Navy production award "for great accomplishment in the production of war equipment." A date is to be announced later for the presentation ceremonies, when representatives of the Army and Navy will present a flag bearing the familiar "E" and a lapel pin for each employee.

According to E. L. Helwig, manager of the plant, the award is being made in recognition of the Company's development and mass production of the now famous Plexiglas transparent plastic bomber nose, the power-driven turret, navigator's dome, cockpit enclosures and other parts for Army and Navy aircraft. Notification was received in a letter from Robert P. Patterson, Under-secretary of War, addressed "to the men and women of the Rohm and Haas Company."

"Plexiglas, the crystal-clear acrylic plastic which made possible the transparent enclosures aboard every type of Army and Navy plane, was developed in Rohm & Haas laboratories and first brought to commercial production in Rohm & Haas plants," Helwig stated. "We built the first transparent plastic bomber nose and developed the method of mass production of these curved sections. Together with the gun turret, the astrodome and other transparent aircraft parts, it is just one of many examples of a chemical development begun in peace which is now meeting the needs of war. We are proud of this recognition from the War Department and shall consider it an honor to display the Army-Navy burgee on our plant."

Mr. and Mrs. George Remley, Croydon, announce the birth of twin boys yesterday afternoon in Harriman Hospital.

MOTOR FATALITIES IN COUNTY CUT IN HALF

Figures For 1942 Far Below Those For 1941; A Fine Record

NO FATALITIES JAN. 1

Motor fatalities in Bucks County during 1942 were reduced more than 50 per cent from the figure for fatal accidents during the previous year.

These figures were released by officials at sub-stations of Pennsylvania Motor Police located in Bucks County. Although the official reports will not be available for several days as to accidents in 1942, the death toll on Bucks county highways in 1942 amounted to only 21 compared to 44 in 1941.

"That's the best kind of news for New Year's," a member of the Pennsylvania Motor Police announced.

The South Langhorne sub-station had 23 fatal accidents in 1941 compared to 12 in 1942. The Doylestown sub-station's death list was cut down to five last year and Quakertown to five.

Unlike a year ago on New Year's Day, there was no fatal accident to start off 1943's first day.

MAN OF 22 CONFESSES TO A NUMBER OF CRIMES COMMITTED IN VICINITY; INCLUDES ATTACKS, ALSO ROBBERIES

Sherman Vaughn, Swain Street, Held by Authorities Here Since Monday, Makes Confession This Morning—Said To Have Admitted Attacks On Two Women, and Robbing of Number of Homes—Section Terrorized

The man who since Monday evening has been held as a suspect by Bristol police in connection with a number of robberies and attacks on women in Bristol and vicinity has confessed to a number of the crimes, it was announced this morning at Bristol police headquarters by Linford J. Jones, chief of police of Bristol, and Anthony Russo, chief Bucks county detective.

Sherman Vaughn, 22, of Swain street, according to the police, has made a complete confession in which he has admitted attacks upon two women, one of which was in Bristol, and three robberies. Vaughn, it is stated, has also informed the police of a number of instances where he went to houses, knocked on the doors and inquired for a "Mr. Edwards." This, the police claim, was a "blind" used by Vaughn to get a survey of the surroundings.

Vaughn, according to the police, has admitted to the following:

Attacking Miss Rose Mary Lutz, 16, Race street, Bristol, on the night of December 16th.

Attacking Miss Margaret Frances, 16, Excelsior avenue, Croydon, on the night of December 22nd.

Entering the home of Mrs. Mary Wade, Pine street, Bristol, on the night of December 27th. Mrs. Wade and a 16-year-old daughter were in bed at the time, and discovered a man in their room. Mrs. Wade gave battle and wrestled with the intruder who fled from the premises.

Entering the home of Bruce E. Peltz, Jr., Buckley street, on the night of December 29th, and stealing $35.

Entering the home of Daniel Smith, Swain street, on the night of December 29th, and taking $3.50.

Entering the home of William Craunton, Farragut avenue, on the night of December 7th, and taking $79.

The wave of crime and attempted crime prevalent here for the past month has had the police authorities on edge. Men in plain clothes have been working details for long hours in an effort to apprehend the offender.

On Monday evening at about eleven o'clock a resident of Spring street telephoned the police that a man was acting suspiciously on that street in the 900 block. Two officers who were at the time patrolling in the police radio car rushed to the scene and searched the area of Spring street, but found no one, until a few minutes later they apprehended Vaughn on Garden street. When questioned by the officers in the car Vaughn was unable to tell a coherent story and he was taken to police headquarters.

Chief Jones, Detective Russo, and Penna. Motor Police from South Langhorne barracks have been questioning Vaughn, tracing his movements, and having some of his victims identify him. The three police agencies have co-operated 100 per cent in the case as all three were interested because Vaughn's crimes, according to the police, have been committed outside of Bristol borough as well as in the borough.

Infantry Attacks Drive Nazis Back

Allied Headquarters in North Africa—A six-hour series of determined infantry attacks by units of the British First Army Brigade have driven Nazi forces from strongly defended hills west of Mateur, with mopping up operations continuing, an Allied spokesman announced today.

Some commandos, it was disclosed, participated in the operation which began at 4 a. m. Tuesday.

Aerial support, including fighters and bombers, was most effective throughout the assault on the hills lying north and south of the road from which German guns had commanded the British position, the spokesman said.

The attack against the principal hill began early Tuesday and six hours later the hill was largely occupied by British troops, except for usual mopping up operations.

Northern flank infantrymen who stormed the heights of one commanding hill clung stubbornly to their new positions in the face of two German counter-attacks.

AXIS INFANT MORTALITY

Infant mortality in the countries with which the Allies are at war is still so high as to cast gloom over government-sponsored efforts of two of them—Germany and Italy—to increase population.

The Census Bureau reveals that for every 1,000 live births in the United States in 1940 infant death numbered but 47, the lowest record yet attained. This is in sharp contrast with 65 for Germany, 104 for Italy and 112 for Japan, respectively. Actually no major power has a mortality figure as low as that of this nation, and only six small countries have better records.

Germany's frantic effort to increase population since the advent of Hitler did, it is true, increase the birth rate of 14.7 per thousand to 20.4 in 1940. Hospitalization allowances to mothers for child care contributed to this, as did the Hitler youth movement, which was constructed it is relatively unimportant whether a baby to serve Der Fuehrer is born out of wedlock, so long as the Reich accords honorable status to unmarried mothers.

FURS FROM RUSSIA

One of the remarkable features of the war is maintenance of sea traffic between the United States and Russia.

Any route between the two countries now available is long, as in the case of the Arctic sea line, the Persian Gulf line and the trip across the Pacific. Yet goods from the United States are reaching Russia over some of these routes if not all of them and Russia is getting cargoes to America, including furs.

Several weeks ago it was revealed that Russia had received a huge shipment of Canadian wheat. Supplies the United States is sending under lease-lend appear to be getting through.

One of the wares Russia has to sell is fur. In January substantial quantities of furs for the account of the Amtorg Trading Corporation, a Soviet government enterprise, will be sold at auction in New York City. Other sales will follow.

The first sale will offer squirrel sable, white fox and red fox. The furs to be sold are reported to be now in America. Probably they arrived as return cargo on vessels carrying lease-lend items to the land of the Muscovites.

MACHINE TOOL DEMAND

A year ago, under the impact of the Pearl Harbor attack, the government was frantically egging on the makers of those tools which are called the machines behind the machines.

The machine tool makers went to it with a will to enable manufacturers to show increased production in planes, ships, guns and tanks. This was the system of American private enterprise performing at its best. Output of machine tools in 1942 reached the figure of $1,300,000,000. The peak of demand was passed in October, but there is still plenty to be done and machine tool production in 1943 is expected to total $1,000,000,000.

The big call on machine tools now is from the aircraft industry. The making of planes requires much precision work. Models are being changed constantly because of lessons learned in the war. It is estimated that currently three of every four carloads of machine tools being turned out are headed for plane plants.

COMMUNICATION

22nd Marine (Reinf.)
EMF, New River, N. C.
Editor of The Courier,
Bristol, Pa.
Dear Sir:

We would appreciate it very much if this letter would be published, but if it isn't we would be pleased if you at home could make the people understand what a furlough means to a fellow in the service.

It is almost impossible to get reservations on a train as hundreds of people will not bother themselves to find other means of transportation except by train. We here, realize that some people have no other means of getting to work except by train, but why do they have to visit their friends around the holidays?

Christmas eve, quite a few fellows from our camp had week-end passes, naturally they wanted to see their folks, but it was impossible for them to get home as all the seats were taken by civilians. Many a boy came back to camp heartbroken and downhearted, and quite a few had tears in their eyes. I wish some of those people that rode the trains over the holidays could have seen those boys faces, and then maybe they would realize their mistake.

The boys in the service get very little chance to get home, and most of them only get furloughs because they will soon be shipping across. I ask you, is it asking too much to let a soldier, sailor, or marine, have one week at home with those he loves?

Give him something to fight for, don't let him come back to camp disappointed. Remember that he is in there for you. So, won't you all back there give him the thing he loves and wants most, and believe me he will never forget your kindness.

Just a home town boy—

CPL. JOHN STENBRUNN.

This system enables the farmer himself to do much of the repair work, points out Prof. C. N. Man of 22 Confesses To A Number of Crimes Here

Vaughn has resided in Bristol for about a year, but has been a resident of the lower Bucks County area for the past four years, having lived in Croydon, Hulmeville, and some sections of Bristol Township. "CURIOSITY KILLED A CAT" by ANNE ROWE

SYNOPSIS

The ghost of an ill-fated secret romance haunts Kay Wentworth, 24, as she comes to Cliffport, Maine, where her father, Philip, noted harbor engineer, is in charge of a U. S. defense project. Five years before, Kay had eloped with Bruce Jollimar, who disappeared after a brief honeymoon. She knew he had come from Cliffport but her early inquiries disclosed no trace of him. Kay wrote to New York asking her Aunt Millie to visit her. The Wentworths are living on part of the old Ellis Burton estate that is still in litigation. Kay is in love with Allan Reid, her father's assistant. She meets Galathea Burton, described as "a crippled recluse," but who proves to be the beautiful and talented "Vanitas," artist and designer. She also becomes acquainted with the local Society dowager-dictator, Aunt Grace Libby; Prof. Henry Stoddard, an elderly savant; Roberts, caretaker of the "new Burton house," whose "sore hands" cause some alarm; Nettie and Mae, veteran servants; Conley Forrestall, local nabob; and others. Returning from the movies one night, Kay is sure she saw Bruce Jollimar, but he eludes her. Allan Reid proposes and is shocked when she tells him of her secret marriage. He identifies Jollimar as the missing Burton heir and agrees to help Kay locate him. She is telling the story.

CHAPTER EIGHT

After Aunt Millie's arrival my already heightened spirits soared even more. Anyone's spirits would. She is that kind of a person.

Dark, distinguished and still very lovely to look at, she is the wealthy member of the family—due to a fat legacy left her in her teens by a godfather. And she has never married.

People call her a congenial spinster. But I—don't know. Her long stays abroad and frequent spur-of-the-moment trips coincide a bit too perfectly with the movements of a "dear old friend": a nationally known financial genius, whose wife is languishing these many years in a sanatorium for nervous diseases. In plain American: a lunatic asylum.

Of course, I haven't the slightest proof, and it may merely be a figurement of my naughty mind. Well, even if I am right: Aunt Millie is still, to all intents and purposes, a spinster lady. And a great darling.

We had a long talk before dinner, in the seclusion of the henery—Dad's name for the two upstairs rooms—and later in the evening Allan joined our council of war, while Dad and Gala, whom I had recruited as an unwitting aide, were deep in a game of chess.

For one thing we decided that, come what might, Dad was to be kept in ignorance of my abortive marriage. For another, that we would wait one week for possible developments, and then let Aunt Millie carry me off. Ostensibly to some Western summer resort. In reality, to Reno.

Aunt Millie had evidently discussed my predicament with a competent lawyer and knew all the angles.

"You'll get a divorce in five minutes flat on the evidence you have. Only the setup is unusual and may attract attention," she elucidated. "That's where your precious Mr. Jollimar could be a help. If he were underfoot, you could charge cruelty or incompatibility, and that's so common a dog wouldn't wag his tail for it. So—we'll have to try and flush our bird, if he really is where he can be flushed."

"How?" Allan asked laconically. "What's to hinder me having a yen to see the innards of that hideous Burton house?" Aunt Millie said with the cute sniff that's a habit of hers, when she is up to something or thinks someone else is. "I'll get your Mr. Forrestall to arrange a sight-seeing tour through the dump. But we'll force him out in the open then—if he is there."

"And how'll I get away from here? What if Dad won't let me?" I asked anxiously.

She threw an expressive glance at the two heads, one dark, one flaming gold, bending closely together over the chessboard in the adjoining room.

"I wouldn't worry about your father," she advised dryly. "Not with the company he's found, and the ideal commissary department you have here."

The next day passed swiftly. All of a sudden it was Thursday and we were dressing for Mrs. Libby's party.

"Odd. Gala Burton not going," Aunt Millie commented while giving me the once-over approvingly. "With her beauty and talent, I don't see how the town allows her to be a recluse. What's been her crime, I wonder? And—what's the matter with her left leg?"

I gaped at her. "Left leg? Why, nothing I can see."

"You wouldn't. You only see Allan," Aunt Millie teased with her famous sniff. And then we were off to the party.

Mrs. Libby's home was a stately Colonial mansion in the smart west end of the town, fronting on a wide boulevard and commanding a glorious view of the bay. And she knew how to make a formal, old-fashioned party comparatively painless by marvelous food and outstanding wines. But—in the seating of her guests she was definitely not perfect.

Dad, I grant, was having a swell time between the hostess and another vivacious dowager, and Aunt Millie was hitting it off famously with her Boston physician. But Allan and I had each drawn a blank.

I was afflicted—there is no other word for it—with Curtis Avery, the handsome young husband of the disagreeable Libby niece, who was either abysmally stupid, or too scared of his wife to dare speak to a halfway young and attractive female. Anyway, trying to keep up the semblance of a conversation with him was a hopeless task.

His only attraction was pictorial. He really could have posed for a blond collar ad. That is, from the neck up. The rest of him was utterly devoid of the virility demanded of such examples of the advertising craft, with shoulders plainly owing their width to his tailor, and a lower front showing signs of a future corporation.

Allan hadn't fared much better. He had taken in Amy Forrestall, in all the glory of her assumed sophistication. I could see them, sitting halfway down and across the table from me, and repeatedly caught unhappy glances from Allan—and positive glares from his pretty neighbor.

For some reason, young Amy was honoring me with an acute dislike. Perhaps she had tried to flirt with Allan, and blamed his unresponsiveness on me. I conjectured—mainly because I couldn't think of another reason.

After dinner, things began to look up. At least I was free to move about and pick my company.

The group around Aunt Millie looked promising, and I joined it—to find it was purely medical. All the doctors in the party had gravitated to the shining professional light from Boston.

Among the names, one sounded familiar.

"Dr. Masterman? Why, I've wanted to see you, for days," I told the pleasant-looking, youngish man who had just been introduced to me. "I know it's unethical, but it would save time and trouble if you'd let me consult you here."

He grinned boyishly. "Go ahead and consult. But I warn you: I'll send you a bill just the same and I may ask embarrassing questions."

"Oh, it isn't about me. I just want your assurance that Roberts—the Burton caretaker—isn't a menace to our lives and health. Our maids are making a sort of pet of him—and they told me you were his physician."

"Dr. Masterman beamed on me. 'Extraordinary, Miss Wentworth! For you to mention Roberts tonight, Dr. Woodill and I have had a long consultation about him earlier in the day.' He turned to Aunt Millie's dinner partner, a portly man with a clever, humorous face.

"One moment, Dr. Woodill. Miss Wentworth is worried about Roberts' hands. May I ask you to—re-assure her?"

The great man smiled condescendingly at his colleague and charmingly at me.

"If you mean: is it safe to have him around—it is absolutely. He could no more transmit his trouble to you than the color of his eyes. I would agree with Dr. Masterman on the point, even without the innumerable tests he has shown me. But outside of that!" He spread his hands, shrugged and forgot my presence.

"My dear colleague, I have pondered your interesting case for hours, and—I'm sorry—but I cannot change my diagnosis. The man has radium poisoning, whether you believe it possible or not," he told Dr. Masterman emphatically.

"But you can't have radium poisoning without radium, and Roberts has never come in contact with it, the other objected. 'It must be an individual form of vitamin deficiency.'"

"Vitamin fiddlesticks!" Dr. Woodill came back with some heat. "The man's hands are full of radium sores and every symptom is clear. There's the—"

Followed a string of medical expressions I didn't understand and don't remember, and the consultation was on again.

I caught a glance from Aunt Millie that made me feel guilty and a fool, it said so plainly "None see what you've done!" and decided to leave the scene of my blunder.

But carrying out the decision wasn't easy. The arguing medics had attracted an audience. A circle four deep had formed in back of me through which I had to push my way.

It was a regular obstacle race. First I bumped into my vacuous dinner partner, who was following the learned discourse in goggle-eyed awe, patently overcome by so much science. Then I stepped on the pet corn of the avidly listening Professor Stoddard, who reacted with a loud "Ouch!" and when at last I had won through the human wall and was looking about for Allan, Nemesis caught up with me in the person of Stella Avery.

Imitating her aunt's imperiousness she grabbed my arm, from the back, and steered me toward a door, telling me briefly: "I must speak with you, Miss Wentworth. In here, please."

"In here" was a small reception room, and once we had reached its sanctuary, Stella Avery lost no time.

"It's about that awful Burton woman in your house. I want to warn you. Don't let her get her claws into your men. Your father, or that Mr. Reid who's always around you."

I was so taken back, I could only stare at her mutely.

"You needn't look at me that way. I know what I'm saying, from bitter experience. She tried to ruin my life." The woman stepped close and hissed into my face: "Five years ago she stole my husband, made him elope with her. But the Lord punished her for it. They had an accident. My poor Curtis almost died from his injuries, but—I forgive him and nursed him back to health. And she! They had to amputate her left leg. Right above the knee. Serves her right!" The venom and triumph in the words sent shivers up and down my spine. "She's a cripple with a cork leg now. She'll steal no more husbands. Not when they find out about her. That's why I am telling you."

"At it again?" Mrs. Libby's voice cut sharply into the poisonous harangue. "I should think you'd get tired of repeating the same story so often. Scat! Run along! You're spoiling my party with your horror yarns."

My knees were feeling funny, and I dropped into a chair while Mrs. Libby marched her niece out of the room. So that was Gala's "handicap!" That was the reason for her seclusion!

How to DOUBLE your Butter

Take ½ lb. of Butter—Have the butter soft. (Keep it at room temperature about two hours. Do NOT melt the butter by cooking.) Cream the butter with an electric mixer or hand beater. If an electric mixer is used, whip it at medium speed and gradually increase to high speed.

Plus ½ cup of exclusive Supplee Devon Style Cream—Add ½ of a measuring cup of the Devon Style Cream to the butter, a tablespoon at a time, until the butter absorbs all of it. Salt to taste, then put in the refrigerator until hardened. Mold or cut into patties when serving.

You'll get 1 lb. of delicious Butter Spread—You double the butter volume with none of the butter flavor lost. And it's far less expensive, too! You'll find it wonderful on toast, in mashed and baked potatoes and other cooked vegetables.

USE the rest of the Devon Style Cream on your salads and in pastries. It's rich, spoon-thick and mild in flavor—so different! Available in half-pints and pints. Order from your Supplee milkman, your neighborhood store or telephone Bristol 2117. When you call, ask for the Devon Style Cream Recipe Folder.

BRISTOL HIGH FIVE SCORES 36 TO 32 VICTORY OVER TEAM FROM LOWER MORELAND HIGH

Better marksmanship from the foul line gave Bristol High a well-earned 36-32 victory over the Lower Moreland High School last night in the local "gym." Coach "Bill" Bartholomew's boys scored eight foul shots in 13 tries, while the visiting aggregation could sink but two in 14 attempts.

The foul shooting represented the Bristol margin of victory as from the field, the visiting team outscored Bristol, 15-14. Ridgeway had a poor night from the 15-foot mark for the Lower Moreland team as he scored but once in eight tries.

The game was fast from the start and at times goals were scored so fast that scorers Corn and Roberts had difficulty in keeping up with the players accounting for the goals. The Lower Moreland team played close basketball for the first half of the game but trailed from the start in the second half although they kept behind close enough not to enable Bristol to get an enjoyable margin.

Cordisco was high scorer but the team worked in unison and this teamwork led to the triumph. At times, Paul Ruby appeared to be the mainstay on the defense as he took the ball off the boards on the rebounds and did some fast passing.

The Moreland team was led by "Eddie" McOwen. The entire visiting team's offensive plays were based on McOwen as he scored eight field goals and a foul for 17 points. Fifteen of the points came in the first half of the game.

MASSI LEADS ATTACK FOR BRISTOL JAY VEES

With Tony Massi leading the attack, the Bristol Jay Vees scored a one-sided 29-19 victory over the Lower Moreland High Jay Vees last night on the local court. Massi scored 12 points in the tilt.

Only in the first half did the Moreland lads possess the ability to cope with Coach Clarence Bartholomew's boys. In the second half it was a runaway for the Bunnies as they registered 15 points while holding the invaders to nine.

FOUL CONVERSION WINS FOR BENSEALEM

A foul conversion by Georgie Hutton gave the Bensalem Township High School five a hair-line decision over the Alumni team last night on the school court. Final tabulation was: Bensalem, 19; Alumni, 18.

The Alumni team held the edge almost the entire game with the boys of Coach Wetherhold fighting an uphill battle. With less than two minutes remaining to be played, the graduates were still out in front when the Owls tied it up.

Norman Tettemer, Temple University star, played well defensively for the losing quintet.

GONZALEZ'S GOAL WINS FOR BENSEALEM GIRLS' QUINTET

Field Goal Scored in The Last
Second of Play Means
Victory

FINAL SCORE IS 29 TO 28

Was Well-Earned Victory For Coach Helen Smith's
Lassies

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Jan. 6.—A field goal by Doris Gonzalez in the closing seconds of the game gave the Bensalem Township girls' team a one-point victory over the Alumnae, 29-28. Gonzalez's goal dropped through the net as the final whistle sounded.

It was a well-earned victory for Coach Helen Smith's lassies. They trailed throughout the entire game until the last two minutes of play and it wasn't until the final quarter got under way that the Bensalem girls were able to close the gap between the score.

Peterson with a minute to go dropped in the double-decker which made the score 28-27 and left it up to Gonzalez to drop in the winning twin-pointer.

Dorothy Bound scored 18 of the losers' points while Gonzalez had 14 points for the victors.
